CONCEPT NOTE

Development is seen in the rapid change of the society owing to industrialization, technological revolution, and socio-economic dynamism. Historically, development is a phenomenon born at a specific moment of history in a specific economic and cultural setting. It is a complex and intricate process which requires appreciation and understanding of various disciplines impacting it. The dynamics of development lead to a configuration of economic, political, social, cultural, and psychological factors which may lead to human growth and happiness as well as an improvement in quality of life determined by welfare indicators including higher life expectancy at birth, reduction in infant mortality, longer and healthier life, improved literacy levels, more food for all, more enrolment of students in schools, richer nutritional standards etc.

Food, shelter, health care, education, and participation of people in development initiatives are rightly suggested as part of integrated development which is not easy to achieve and accomplish in view of challenges such as, poverty, hunger, health hazards and gender inequalities. These have multiplied manifold to affect seriously the economic and social health of the nations. The rapid industrialisation and urbanization has posed a serious threat to the natural environment. Growth strategies have promoted consumerism leading to over-exhaustion of the natural resources. Liberalisation and market economic forces have impinged heavily on human ecology. The global crises have played their part in retarding the sustainable development.

Need to establish strong linkages among ecological, economic, and social life has been well realized for sustainable development. The agenda 2030 of development has been set with 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) adopted by 193 member countries of UN during its Summit on 25 September, 2015. These aim at stimulating developmental actions for a sustained life. The goals set for Sustainable Development provide us the direction to prevent ourselves from perishing and make progress to eradicate poverty, have better access to education, stop oceanic acidification to save marine species, reduce global greenhouse gas emissions, improve health and quality of life, be ready for climate action, save water, soil, air, conserve energy, maintain ecosystem, build stronger statistical data base with ICT enabled tools, remove gender biasness and stereotypes.

The challenges faced for self-survival and self-development are comprehended well along with its coping mechanisms. As such, ample number of opportunities may be availed for a sustained life. The integrated friendly approach working through partnerships and cooperation bring in the long-lasting impact on human life. The role of media, group discussions, e-learning platform, live chat shows, podcasts, seminars, webinars as effective means to achieve sustainable goals cannot be undermined. Promotion of sustainable industrialization, removal of poverty and hunger, building of resilient infrastructure, judicious use of natural resources, responsible consumption and production, development of sustainable cities and communities, conservation of energy, fuel and forest, decent work, and education for all, show us the path to lead a sustained life. Several national programmes involving community participation are being pursued for achieving SDGs in Bharat. The importance of visual arts, peace and vocational education for sustained growth has been well appreciated. Skill enhancement in management and journalism go hand in hand with wider usage of computer applications and artificial intelligence towards sustainable development.
